

The fly is about to have a unique relationship with the swatter.

A very basic technique that modern corporations like Delta use to manage their workforce is to have employees believe they are part of the corporate decisions that affect their lives when, in fact, they are not.

It's called "Strategic Human Resource Management," and it's as clinical as it sounds.

Our "servant leaders" often claim that we don't need a Voice because we have a relationship with them that is unique and even family-like. They're wrong.

It's time to turn the page, gain a Voice and form a mature relationship with our company, based in respect and equality.
