IAM Delta Survey Hacked

After an exhaustive investigation conducted by the IAM, it is apparent that last month's IAM Delta Flight Attendant survey was compromised.

As the survey was launched, so was an orchestrated campaign to sabotage it. Thousands of surveys were completed without one question answered—they were just clicked-through and submitted fraudulently.

Delta Flight Attendants began contacting the IAM in huge numbers to complain, exclusively stating that when they attempted to login to the survey they received a message stating that "No More Responses Permitted." This meant the survey had already been submitted.

The only way to take the survey for another person was to know their last name and employee number. Only persons with access to this information could do this. It is shameful that there are people who are so afraid of Flight Attendants having a Voice.

All those that contacted the IAM had their surveys reset, but thousands whom we now know were locked out did not contact us. And therefore were denied an opportunity to take the survey.

The IAM is currently in the process of developing a new survey in which every Delta Flight Attendant will be mailed their own personal identification number, so this will never happen again.
